Abstract

This study aims to investigate the prevailed pattern of socialization of the Palestinian family from the perspective of the students of Al-Aqsa University, and explore to what extent the pattern of socialization differs among fathers and mothers, as well as its differences according to sex, residency, and the average of monthly income.

To achieve this aim, the researcher has designed a questionnaire and applied it to a random sample of 500 students of both sexes. This study indicates that the democratic pattern of socialization is prevailed. The study also reveals that there is a significant difference among fathers and mothers. However, the study does not indicate significant differences with regard to the sociological view of the prevailed pattern of socialization of the students of Al-Aqsa university.
